

What fittings should I use?

Of course you can create your own symbols but here is a guide to the ones we've used and where the corresponding fittings would be best placed.

Wall mounted fittings are the ultimate form of accent lighting and can be used in every room of the home to create a multitude of layered lighting effects adding drama, depth and shade to even the most basic décor.

Recessed fittings (wall or ceiling) provide large amounts of light without taking up floor and table space and they eliminate the overhead clutter of hanging lights in living areas and in narrow hallways, thereby creating a feeling of increased space.

Ceiling fittings (mounted or pendant) in the centre of the room are a great way to add interest to plain ceilings and are ideal if you're short on space and looking for direct lighting from above. Pendant fittings can be altered according to the height of your ceiling and add a touch of elegance when directly over the dining table.

Track lighting can be used to cast light on a statue or picture for dramatic effect and the right lamps can create an ambient atmosphere. A great way of opening up your living space is to throw light onto just one wall.

Floor or table lamps give a really cosy effect and are great for reading if you place them next to sofas or armchairs. Another idea is to set them in the corners of the room, either on the floor, sideboard or shelves. This will create the impression of spaciousness and give the room a relaxed ambience.
